

THE MAIL ON SUNDAY JANUARY 9 2011

live

&
2011
TRAVEL
SPECIAL

IT'S BEEN A FIASCO

Adrian Chiles owns up

PHOTOGRAPHED
BY IAN DERRY

This week's must-have, must-see, must-do

► THE HOTELS

No other destination within four hours' flight time can match Marrakech for the sheer volume of snake charmers, inedible foods and 'tour guides' who practically need to be exorcised by a priest to leave you alone. The Sanssouci Collection's boutique hotels offer all this, plus the chance to be boiled and scraped in a hammam. sanssoucicollection.com

► THE CLOTHES

Dragons' Den tycoon Peter Jones has launched his own businesswear line, with shirts from £85. Sure, he knows what impresses bosses – but hasn't anyone told him there's already a shop called Peter Jones that sells these things? You'd think he'd have researched it... peterjonescollection.tv

► THE WATCH

Back in 1958, flying across the Atlantic was so new and posh the aviation-obsessed folks at Breitling named a watch after it: the Transocean. Fast-forward 50 years and space is the new frontier – but thankfully, Breitling has refrained from making bleeping, LED-encrusted space watches, instead reissuing the Transocean as a sleek, chic chronograph. Much nicer. £6,160, breitling.com

► THE RESTAURANT

With a name that means 'live coal' and a grill imported from the Basque mountains, you'd think Brasa in Fulham had a Spanish-barbecue theme – but with dishes like potted rabbit and Mersham pheasant it's classic English. brasalondon.com

► THE FILM

The Green Hornet first appeared in a Thirties radio serial, but to our knowledge has never been filmed in 3D by a surrealist director (Michel Gondry) with a chubby comedian (Seth Rogen) in the lead role. This should be worth watching.

► THE ART

There's been no shortage of ice this winter. Might as well put it to good use: from Thursday there'll be an Ice Sculpting Festival in Canada Square Park in London's Canary Wharf for anyone over 12.